

Yes, the name is a pun on a piece of media in a format that isn't even available in this time

The Daily Double

Sunday edition

What are you gonna do about it though?

NO. 94

SUNDAY, 11TH MAY 1943

PRICE 2d

Agent dies in Germany

To add to the really great time our country is having right now, a second of our top spies has died within one week. Barry Player, known to his friends as Piccalilly, was found dead in eastern Germany late on Wednesday night last week. This adds to the previous death of Dave Clave, aka Bovril, who was found one week ago. Member of the War

Council Mark Albrighton has commented on this recent spate of deaths: "I can assure you the British Government considers this top priority and we will find the culprits soon."

"Barry was a solitary man in many ways, though he had a great passion for music and theatre. His record collection of classical music was unlike anything I'd ever seen, truly marvellous. He'd listen to them for hours a day." - a friend of Barry.

Ration recipe: Ricecakes

For this recipe you will need: a tin of spam, 1 teaspoon of butter, 200g flour, 1 grain of rice. Cover the grain of rice in flour, then butter, then boil in a very small saucepan. After 15 minutes, your ricecake will be ready to eat! Make sure to split it though, you don't need to eat it all in one.

New radio show on today at 7pm: Kiss My Crotchet

From the brilliant comedic minds that brought you the fantastic 'Miss, You're Touching My Arse', a new radio comedy premiers this evening at 7pm: 'Kiss My Crotchet'. This fun-filled show for the whole family follows John Fencepost, an indignant musician, as he gets himself in many unfortunate situations. 'Kiss My Crotchet' has been described by critics as "somewhat bearable to listen to" and "better than silence". Starring Ronald Bassoon as the lead role, and Diane Jajaja as his ever-suffering wife Tina Tona, 'Kiss My Crotchet' has every chance of becoming the next hit.

Does HRH Queen Elizabeth II play chess?

POSSIBLY

Our royal correspondent, Michael Hand, had nothing better to do, so he decided to try asking the queen of our country if she likes to play chess, or even plays it regularly at all.

Her response was enlightening: simultaneously a beautiful window into the mind and lifestyle of the monarchy, as well as down to earth and empathetic to the common man. Her words: "Eh, not really, it's just a bit too hard for me."

It really is incredible what our monarchy can teach us.

SALE
50%
OFF

This Thing

You can probably find a use for this, even though I can't.

£909

T: 012-345-6789

